Regarding Bob Bishop:

Although I grew up in Saint Louis, I had worked as a Designer for 15 years in Chicago and New York. When it came time for me to make my next career move, now that I was living in Saint Louis again, my lack of knowledge of the agencies in town put me at a disadvantage. I needed someone on my team who knew the agencies and had great relationships with key people in those companies.

Miraculously (it seems now), through a Google search, I found Bob Bishop's company. Like anyone who finds a company online, I had my doubts at first. But from the moment I met Bob, his professionalism and his great ability to listen struck me as unique. It may sound simple: to listen. But so many professionals just don't. Bob listened during two meetings to my experience, how I felt about certain positions I've had, what kind of job I wanted and also looked at every Design piece I have in my possession. After learning so much about my professional experience, Bob proceeded to set up interviews for me. He only scheduled meetings for me with companies and individuals that he thought I would respect and would offer me an environment of professional growth. I appreciated his customized and long-term thinking.

I can't imagine a smarter, more connected, hard working and professional individual to represent any creative person seeking job placement in Saint Louis. After such a positive experience, perfect job fit and long-term career move, the only drawback is that my every intention is to never work with Bob again! --Unless I'm the one looking to hire a creative professional! Bob is certainly the first person I would call.

Sincerely,
