

About 2 weeks ago, I had the pleasure of meeting Bob Bishop. I walked into his office and introduced myself and proceeded to show him my book. Each page that I flipped, I was more intrigued by his sharp observations and cutting-edge comments. Here was a man that was pointing out stuff about my work that in all my 15+ years as an Art Director, I had never thought of before. His criticism though painfully honest at times, was exceptionally constructive.

Bob's suggestions were brilliant in their simplicity and his knowledge of the creative process in both Advertising and Corporate Communications shined throughout the interview. Bob's expertise and experience in the field is very evident and gives me the confidence to have him represent me to his clients. From a client perspective, with Bob's vast experience, he has the ability to direct just the right candidate to the right company.

This is the first time that I have felt confident that a recruiter could actually do an equally good job for both myself and the potential employer. He's a tribute to the industry.

Sincerely,
Stacy Economon
